The Internet Archive, a vital digital repository for millions of historical documents and websites, is currently grappling with a significant distributed denial-of-service (DDoS) attack. Reports indicate that the DDoS attack began earlier today, severely impacting the site's accessibility and functionality.

The Internet Archive team said to have made 'some adjustments' and is actively working to mitigate the disruption. Despite their efforts, users have experienced intermittent access issues, leading to frustration among researchers, historians, and the general public who rely on the site for various purposes.

up again.

This has been a back and forth with the attackers. We have made some adjustments, but geez.

at least, Happy Memorial Day!
